CHAMPION PICKLEBALL

Mission Hills continues to evolve with the times.

Rancho Mirage sits in the heart of the Coachella Valley just minutes east of Palm Springs — close enough to inherit its glamour, but with a distinction of its own. This is where mid-century entertainers, presidents, and golf legends helped shape one of the desert’s most recognizable addresses. Mission Hills Country Club emerged within that world, combining championship golf, residential prestige, and a setting that still delivers the atmosphere of classic desert California. Nearby street names — Bob Hope Drive, Frank Sinatra Drive, Dinah Shore Drive, Gerald Ford Drive — read like a roster of the people who shaped the city’s identity. Mission Hills remains central to that legacy: a place where history, recreation, and design still intersect in a distinctly Rancho Mirage setting.

In most cities, a street name is geography. In Rancho Mirage, it’s biography.

FIVE DECADES OF CHAMPIONSHIP HISTORY – AND STILL EVOLVING

Poppie's Pond remains one of the most recognizable finishing-hole traditions in women's professional golf.

★ THE DINAH

Mission Hills became one of women's golf's defining stages when the Colgate-Dinah Shore Winner's Circle debuted here in 1972. Elevated to LPGA major championship status in 1983, the tournament remained at Mission Hills for 51 consecutive years and helped turn Poppie's Pond into one of the most recognizable finishing-hole traditions in the sport. Even after the championship moved to Texas following the 2022 edition, its legacy remains inseparable from Mission Hills.

★ MISSION HILLS TODAY

Since 2023, Mission Hills has hosted the PPA Masters, one of professional pickleball's signature events and a visible marker of the club's continuing evolution. Its championship golf history remains part of the setting, but Mission Hills today is equally defined by an active private-club community, major racquet-sports infrastructure, and a reputation that continues to attract national-level competition. The stage did not go dark – it simply changed programming.
